
PREFACE

Welcome to the latest issue of WSB University scholarly journal “Security Forum”.

Modern security concepts are based primarily on the rule of law and citizens’ trust in institutions which represent the state. The state is therefore a special guarantee of security for its citizens. The duty assumed by the state does not absolve members of society of their responsibility and activities in this respect. The manifestation of such responsibility is, among others, the statements of people of science and at the same time experienced practitioners, published on the pages of “Security Forum”. The mission of the journal is to disseminate the results of scientific research and to promote knowledge in the field of security.

The biannual “Security Forum” is a scientific publication related to the discipline of security science. The journal is developing systematically, as evidenced by the presence of academics and renowned experts from Poland and several countries involved in security research on the editorial board. The group of reviewers who cooperate with the journal is also constantly expanding. The activities undertaken by the newly appointed editorial team and the editorial board aim to stimulate the scientific community and institutions responsible for security. It is also important to increase the level of internationalisation of the journal by strengthening cooperation with the foreign community.

At the same time, I encourage you to join the discussion on security in “Security Forum”, because, as Mr Neuman wrote, security is not everything, but without security everything is nothing.
